

I woke up at for got out of bed and looked out side and then went back to sleep. I got up at 5:40 (normal time) threw on some sweats (It was really cold in my apartment this morning and the radiators were not on.) and read where the students in my district were on a 2 hour delay. We had to report at normal time. So I got ready and headed out. It was a busy but productive day at work and the drive in and back was not bad. When I got home it was still very cold in the apartment. I walked down stairs to ask a neighbor if they had called about the situation and heard people working on the system. Well the radiators came on for an hour or 2 and then went off. I'm so glad I have an electric blanket and a electric radiator to heat my bedroom tonight.
